Welcome to Canterbury Village

If someone asked you to envision a classic American house, the picture of a Cape Cod home may come to mind. These homes feature steep pitched roofs, dormers, and central doors flanked by windows. They were built throughout New England into the mid-1800s, and continued to be a popular architectural style after World War II. Cape Cods were built to be a manageable size, efficient to heat, and conducive to additions.

Many of the Cape Cod homes in Canterbury Village have been expanded and updated over the years, yet they retain their enduring charm. The neighborhood offers a little bit of a nostalgic vibe, where community events and neighborly connections are still a common and cherished part of life.

Fun Fact: In the 1950's, you could purchase one of these newly constructed Canterbury Village Cape Cod's for only $64/month!
